These mounting prices were ascribed by oil interests to a shortage of supply In 1919, the United States consumed 418,000,000 barrels of crude oil, whereas it produced only 376,000,000. The new fields. Increasing costs were attributed in part also to the fact that the depth of drilling was increasing. It seems certain, however, that the soaring prices of crude oil are out of all proportion to the increased expenses. This apparent fact is attested by the tremendous profits which the companies are making. The earnings of the various leading companies for last year range from $30 to $100 or more a share, and, as the advances in crude oil prices since the first of this year amount to from 20 to 50 per cent, earnings for 1910 are likely to be considerably higher. So profitable have been the operations of the oil companies during a period of years that they have been able to accumulate enormous surpluses; and many stock dividends are said to be in contempla-

WHY MR. GOMPERS!

"I have not met one man who has said to me that he was in favor of prohibition just as it stands today. We are the object of the ridicule and contempt of the people of other countries, who cannot understand why 100,-000.000 people have been subjected to the wishes of a few fanatics who have attempted to make people good by law,"

-Samuel Gompers in a speech at Trenton. If Mr. Gompers is correctly quoted he must be losing his mind or else he has locked himself up in his room so he won't have to talk to anybody. Such stateselves directly in the path of a whirlwind of ments as this however, do prohibition far more good
